Novatel Wireless Ovation U727 USB Modem Wins PC Magazine Editors' Choice Award

Pocket-Sized USB Data Modem with Integrated File Storage Provides "Highest Average Speeds of any Device Tested"

SAN DIEGO, Jun 10, 2008 (BUSINESS WIRE) -- Novatel Wireless, Inc., (Nasdaq: NVTL), a leading provider of wireless broadband solutions, today announced the Ovation(TM) U727 USB modem has won an Editor's Choice Award from PC Magazine, a distinction honoring products and services that rise above similar products in their respective categories. The full article can be seen at <http://www.pcmag.com/article2/0,2817,2316928,00.asp>

Optimized for high-speed, EVDO Rev. A Networks, the Ovation U727 plugs directly into a computer's USB port, enabling users to surf the Web, check email and access important business documents with speeds similar to those of a cable or DSL connection.

Throughout extensive testing of mobile broadband product offerings by PC Magazine analysts, the Ovation U727 consistently provided the fastest average download/uplink speeds, beating out the latest USB modem offerings from competitors. Also receiving high marks in the review was the U727's onboard GPS capability, which leverages both autonomous and assisted GPS and enabled PC Magazine's reviewers to pinpoint their location, even in the "challenging terrain of midtown Manhattan."

"The great efficiency, reliability and blazing speed of the U727 provides the ultimate tool for connecting to the Internet anytime, anywhere," said Peter Leparulo, CEO of Novatel Wireless. "It's a great honor to be recognized once again by PC Magazine for producing best-in-class mobile data solutions."
